

Self Introduction: Eleah Jno-Baptiste

Hi, my name is Eleah Jno-Baptiste I'm from Baton Rouge, Louisiana and I am also a freshman at Georgia State University.

I major in film and when I graduate college as an undergrad I want to find a career as a filmmaker and director. The industry itself is pretty flexible when it comes to the various genres and concepts, however more could be done to improve it as a collective. Some of my favorite films and shows include The Parent Trap, Juice, Clueless (I know, cliché), Princess Diaries, The Get Down, Jane the Virgin, the Naruto series, and A LOT more but for the sake of this blog, I'll keep my list short. I really enjoy watch movies and shows while simultaneously critiquing them by creating alternative endings and etc. It's very important to me that I work in the film industry because I believe that the film industry lacks some things that I could contribute.

Okay, that's enough film talk, let talk about my next favorite thing- food. We all know that one person who spends too much time looking through food pictures and videos on social media, well I'm that person. I like a lot of foods but there are things I don't particularly enjoy such as grapes, raisins (I don't know why they exist), and most salads. I don't like some foods that most people appreciate and vice versa, for example I like pineapples on pizza and I know that some think that it's gross. Food in general is great because it can bring great discussion whether people are agreeing or disagreeing.

On to the next topic- fashion. It might not appear that I'm into these two things because I look a little too comfortable most of the time (the leggings and sweatshirt combo is a must), but sometimes I take pride in being creative with my appearance. I usually draw much of my inspiration from social media and retro fashion in order to create some of my outfits. Although I appreciate fashion as an art form, there are times (many times) where I just want to wear sweatpants all day everyday.
